White House says no recession in sight

The U.S. is "in pretty good shape," advisers say.

White House officials pushed back on Sunday against concerns that economic growth may be faltering, saying they saw little risk of recession despite a volatile week on global bond markets, and insisting their trade war with China was doing no damage to the United States.

Trump administration economic adviser Larry Kudlow said trade deputies from the two countries would speak within 10 days and "if those deputies meetings pan out... we are planning to have China come to the USA" to advance negotiations over ending a trade battle that has emerged as a potential risk to global economic growth.

But even with the stalks stalled for now and the threat of greater tariffs and other trade restrictions hanging over the world economy, Kudlow said on "Fox News Sunday" the U.S. remained "in pretty good shape."

White House economic adviser Larry Kudlow. REUTERS

"There is no recession in sight," Kudlow said. "Consumers are working. Their wages are rising. They are spending and they are saving."

His comments follow a rocky week in which concerns about a possible U.S. recession began to drive financial markets and seemed to put administration officials on edge about whether the economy would hold up through the 2020 presidential election campaign. Democrats on Sunday argued Trump's trade policies are now posing an acute, short-term risk.

U.S. stock markets tanked last week on recession fears, with all three major indexes closing down about 3 percent on Wednesday only to pair their losses by Friday due to expectations the European Central Bank might cut rates.

The Fed and 19 other central banks have already loosened monetary policy in what Fitch Ratings described as the largest shift since the 2009 recession.

A slowdown would be bad news for Trump, who is building his 2020 bid around the economy's performance. He told voters at a rally last week they had "no choice" but to vote for him to preserve their jobs and investments. REUTERS

Back-to-school shopping: Kids influenced by social media push parents to overspend

NerdWallet is a personal finance website.

ISTOCK

Kids pushing their parents for the coolest in back-to-school gear is a late-summer tradition, and today, youngsters have some backup: social media influencers.

Peer and social media influences on children are not news unto themselves, but it turns out these factors are affecting how parents spend their back-to-school dollars, according to a new NerdWallet survey conducted online by The Harris Poll.

The online survey included 2,010 U.S. adults, among whom 595 are parents of kids in kindergarten through college. Of those parents, at least 6 in 10 say their children are influenced by peers or social media when making their back-to-school wish list. And about half of these parents (51 percent) say they typically end up buying back-to-school products their kids want because of these influences.

"The whole notion of 'Keeping up with the Joneses' is amplified on social media, with an entire army of influencers telling your child what they 'need' to have this year. That can make back-to-school shopping a real headache," says NerdWallet personal finance expert, Kelsey Sheehy. "Ease the pressure by having a plan in place before you get started. You can even turn it into a learning opportunity and involve your child in the process so they can learn to prioritize and work within a budget."

Here's how parents are thinking about their back-to-school shopping lists, along with some tips on how to manage the costs and potential frustrations.

Key findings

Nearly all (97 percent) of parents with children in kindergarten through college plan on back-to-school shopping this year. Half (50 percent) of parents planning to do back-to-school shopping this year say they'll likely splurge, compared with 93 percent of those who shopped last year who say they splurged.

Six in 10 parents (60 percent) with kids in school say their children are influenced by social media and 67% percent say their children are influenced by friends on what they want to buy for back-to-school.

More than half (52 percent) of these parents say they feel pressured by their children to buy back-to-school items they want, even if they cost more than they'd normally want to spend.

Note: Throughout this report, unless otherwise noted, "parents" refers to parents with children in kindergarten through college.

Preparing for peer, social media pressure

At least 6 in 10 parents say their children are influenced by social media (60 percent) and friends (67 percent) on what to buy for back-to-school.

In turn, the kids pass the pressure on to parents. Just over half (52 percent) of parents with children in school say they feel pressured by their kids to purchase supplies and/or apparel, even if they cost more than they'd normally want to spend, and 51 percent say they usually end up buying the products their kids want because of influence from others.

Back-to-school shopping tip: Share the list and a budget with your child. You have a list of things your child needs and likely can't indulge every whim on brand names and costly designs. Helping your child understand this up front can save you from an argument in the store and can impart a useful lesson in personal finance.

Metro caught up with "Where'd You Go, Bernadette" stars Troian Bellisario and Zoe Chao.

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Zoe Chao and Troian Bellisario (right) with their castmates. GETTY

In Richard Linklater's latest film "Where'd You Go, Bernadette" (now in theaters), there is a lot — a lot of laughs, a lot of gasps and a lot of heartwarming moments that truly make you stop and think. The inspiring film is based on the wildly popular novel by Maria Semple, and the cast features more talent in one place than the seating chart at the Academy Awards. Troian Bellisario, who plays the determined scientist Becky, and Zoe Chao, who plays the deceivingly cunning Soo-Lin in the movie, sat down with Metro to give us the scoop on working with Linklater, why they love the story, and what they hope audiences take away from the film.

Were you familiar with the novel by Maria Semple before being cast?

Troian Bellisario (TB): Well, before filming, yes. But not before being cast. When I got the meeting with Richard Linklater after he responded to my tape, I started telling people the name of the project and so many of my friends went, "Are you kidding? That's an incredible book." So that was when I went out and bought the book and started reading it, but I didn't know the story until after I had auditioned for the role.

Zoe Chao (ZC): Yes, I was. I had a ton of friends who loved that book and my mom had read it. She was so excited about me getting to audition for it and I read it right around when I auditioned for the role. It's such a superb read, Maria's voice is so hilarious and smart.

What first intrigued you about your roles?

TB: Well I'm a science nerd, and a part of me always wanted to be a marine biologist. When I read the sides I just knew that there was a part of me that really wanted to do this. Here's this woman who is taking samples and having a conversation and sort of living a life I had always dreamed about on the side. But honestly what drew me to it is that I went to marine biology camp as a kid. So it was a little bit of a fantasy for me.

ZC: I love Soo-Lin, I feel very grateful that I got to play her. I kind of think of her as a bottle of seltzer, just all of these little bubbles being barely contained by a cap. She's so intense and tries very hard to play it cool but she is just not cool — one of the many reasons why I love her. I think she's really smart and determined and good at her job. But also an opportunist and conniving and is trying to get hers.

How was it working with Richard Linklater and the rest of the cast?

TB: I mean, a total dream. I've been a huge fan of Rick's since "Before Sunrise." That whole trilogy really changed the whole way I thought about filmmaking and certainly "Boyhood" as well. [Linklater] is an incredible filmmaker so just to be on his set and to be in rehearsals with him and hear him talk about the scenes and characters, it was just an absolute dream. Then you add in the fact that since I was a young girl Cate Blanchett has been an idol of mine. Honestly, it was really odd to have someone you idolize in front of the camera and then behind the camera and then be like, "OK, guess I have to go to work now."

ZC: It was the dreamiest, really thrilling. Kristin (Wiig) is such a massive talent and for being so gifted is the most humble person I've met. She has a massive heart just as big as her talent. She makes acting really easy. When doing scenes with her, it was such a delight. She's so present and such a generous acting partner. Cate is the greatest of all time and some of my favorite performances onscreen have been her. So it was pretty surreal. Then working with Rick was the dreamiest. He's a legend and I grew up watching his films and it's hard to think of American cinema and not think of Richard Linklater. He runs such a steady set. He's so confident and clear and laid-back. You really feel like he trusts you.

Bernadette seems to lose herself in the film as an artist who can't create. As an actress and a creator, do you relate?

TB: Absolutely. I believe that all of creation and destruction are linked. If you're not following through on a thread of creation, it's going to turn back, sort of like a snake eating its own tail, and it's going to lead to some sort of destruction.

ZC: Totally. What you do is often how you identify, too, so it's hard to have that taken away or put aside. You can feel lost. That's why this film is so moving, we get to see Bernadette find herself.

'The Amazing Johnathan Documentary' proves nothing is as it seems

We spoke with the film's director, Ben Berman, on the pitfalls of covering the famous magician.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

It should be a rule of thumb that a documentary that covers a subject without anything going wrong along the way is typically not the most interesting experience for the viewer. Even though it's great for the rest of us, this kind of bargain can put the documentarian through hell and back. This is exactly what happened to filmmaker Ben Berman with his new film "The Amazing Johnathan Documentary," now on Hulu.

Berman was first aware of The Amazing Johnathan after watching one of his legendary and unhinged performances on Comedy Central when he was around 13 years old. If you are of a certain age, you have probably seen them, too. The magician curses and makes it seem as though all of his tricks go dangerously wrong onstage when, in fact, that is the act itself. As Berman grew older, he forgot about the performer until news that the performer had been diagnosed with the fatal heart disease, cardiomyopathy, surfaced and that the hugely successful Vegas magician would be gifting some of his tricks to younger magicians after his inevitable passing.

"I thought that was a pretty beautiful thing. He wanted his legacy to live on after he was gone and live on through other magicians. And I thought that was really cool," Berman told me over the phone. From there came his idea to document Johnathan in his current moment, and he got the opportunity to follow the magician as he began to make his comeback to the stage.

But of course, Johnathan would prove to be a more difficult subject to cover than Berman would ever imagine. The magician has been open in his daily use of crystal meth and while Berman and his crew had their cameras going, Johnathan alerted them that there were, perhaps, multiple documentary crews that would be making similar films along the way.

This throws a wrench in Berman's plan, as his access to his intended subject begins to decrease as these "crews" vie for camera time. But, are we sure they are real or is this actually the work of one of the world's greatest tricksters? That is the question that Berman was then forced to pursue the answer to as the film takes its unintended turn.

"It was certainly a wild ride that was at times either uncomfortable, upsetting, worrisome or just a huge, huge bummer," explains an exasperated Berman. "But I think that's part of the value of the movie."

Sky is the limit for Gordon

Patriots' wide receiver corps gets a much-needed boost.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

Last week in this space we discussed all of the question marks the Patriots had, particularly at the wide receiver position.

One of those questions was answered Friday night, when, seemingly out of the blue, it was announced that Josh Gordon would be reinstated following an indefinite suspension from violating the NFL's substance-abuse policy.

"We are all rooting for Josh to succeed, both personally and professionally," NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell said in a statement. "Everyone shares in that hope and will continue to support him to every extent possible. But as Josh acknowledged, ultimately his success is up to him."

As we learned last season with Gordon, he's no sure thing to play a full season due to his off-the-field demons. In fact, he hasn't played a full season in the league since his rookie year in Cleveland in 2012.

But at 28 years old, and given the flashes we saw with him last year, Patriots fans have every reason to be excited about Gordon donning the Flying Elvis helmet again.

Gordon showed his ability right out of the gate with the Pats, as in his second game in a New England uniform he leapt over two Colts defenders to haul in a 34-yard touchdown grab from Tom Brady. The play had many reminiscing about the Brady-to-Randy-Moss connection from a decade ago, as Gordon possesses more raw, "go-up-and-get-it" athleticism than any Pats receiver since Moss.

Gordon also had a 55-yard reception against the Bears in Chicago last October when he appeared to have run out of gas while on his way to what should have been a touchdown, and he had a 130-yard receiving day in early November against the Packers.

Josh Gordon was reinstated this past Friday. GETTY IMAGES

In games in which Gordon played last year, the Patriots went 8-3, but two of those three losses came in Gordon's final two appearances on the team before his suspension. He had five catches for 96 yards in that memorable 34-33 loss to Miami in early December, but he was basically a no-show the following week when he had just one catch for 19 yards in a 17-10 loss to Pittsburgh. Gordon was suspended four days after the Steelers game.

The Patriots wound up winning every game the rest of the way without Gordon, as Rob Gronkowski was forced into a situation where he had to become one of Brady's top targets once again.

With Gronk now retired, the Patriots will once again count on Gordon to be one of Brady's primary receivers. It's a flip of the coin as to whether it will ultimately work out, but nonetheless the Patriots' receiving corps looks a whole lot better than it did one week ago.

Last chance?

Former NFL coach Jack Del Rio was one of several people around the league that criticized the NFL's decision to reinstate Gordon.

"It's got to be his last chance," Del Rio said on ESPN. "How the league decided to allow him back in already, I don't understand. He just got suspended. To be able to come back this quickly is shocking to me."

Aries A passionate attitude can help you reach your goals, but discipline and practicality will ensure that you get there without suffering setbacks on the way. Personal gain and romance are featured.

Taurus Think before you act. You may crave change, but that doesn't mean the time is right to make a move. Take your time, plan your actions and leave no room for error.

Gemini Spend more time taking care of your physical, emotional and financial needs. Refuse to get caught up in someone else's drama or extravagance. Protect your reputation.

Cancer You know what's required, so refuse to let the little things get in your way. Take care of business as well as your physical and emotional health.

Leo Learn as you go. An open mind and a desire to do things on your own will tip the scale in your favor. Don't feel obligated to follow someone else.

Virgo Step up and take charge. If you want to change, do something about it. Focus on the end results and don't stop until you reach your goal.

Libra Say what's on your mind and clear the air. Once you know where you stand and how others feel, you will know how to best move forward.

Scorpio Set a course and refuse to let anyone sidetrack you. An energetic and disciplined approach will help you bring about positive change and greater freedom to do as you please.

Sagittarius Home and self-improvements will give you a new lease on life. Don't feel that you must abide by someone else's grand plan when you have your own path to follow.

Capricorn Speed things up and finish what you start before someone tries to interfere. The less interaction you have with others, the easier it will be to get things done your way.

Aquarius Opportunity knocks. Look over your options and consider what will bring you the most satisfaction and the least stress. Do what suits you best and have no regrets. Romance is highlighted.

Pisces Don't reveal information that might be used against you or put you in an awkward position. Moderation should be practiced, regardless of what others choose to do. Personal improvement is encouraged. EUGENIA LAST
